FROM THE OLD WORLD.

Interesting Correspondence from Dr. A. H. Scott.

Correspondence of the Democrat.

LONDON, ENGLAND,
69 EUSTON ROAD,
June 3d, 1886.

At last after long anticipated calculation I find myself in London the great British Empire. The largest civilized commercial city of the world, of grand and magnificent architectural proportions, of immense wealth, with great intelligence and wisdom, and all under petticoat government, with a noble old Gladstone as her Premier, battling like a hero and patriot for his "Home Rule" Bill for poor oppressed and down-trodden Ireland—an effort which if defeated now will eventually be sustained by the people and Parliament, and an act which will be hailed with joy and place upon a pinnacle of immortal renown, the great author of it. To see and witness as I have, within the short time given me, the condition of the Irish peasantry serves but to excite my greatest sympathy in their behalf, earnestly and sincerely hoping that Gladstone in the noble task he has undertaken to better their condition may yet accomplish it, and ensrine himself in their hearts as the indefatigable poor man's friend.

My head is still rocking and swimming from crossing over from Dublin to Holyhead yesterday. I found the Midland Hotel here at which I had anticipated stopping, so full of guests that I could not procure a room, and consequently went across the street opposite it to this place.

The lawyers here all wear togas and wigs. They look with their hair gray and curled all around in ringlets more like the feminine than the masculine gender. London is a very great city. I have it all yet to see. Nevertheless give me America, "the land of the free and the home of the brave" forever. Yesterday as we came through the country by railway to this place, I thought quite frequently of Col. Embury of his great admiration and love for fine stock on beholding so many very remarkably fine Alderney cows as they were quietly grazing along the side of the track. One of these would be worth a dozen or more of our cane brake stock in Arkansas. Why should not our people turn their attention in this line and improve theirs by importing them from the "old world?"

We have many men who take pride and are already many of them engaged in stock raising, owning large stock ranches and who are able and with ready means to undertake it. We have a country well adapted for it. These Alderneys are worth here from 20 to 25 pounds sterling per head. I wish I had five of them at home myself. I felt somewhat disappointed last night on reaching here to find that there were no letters awaiting my arrival. I am feeling very anxious indeed to get them and hope they will not be delayed much longer. I met in the American Exchange this morning two or three Louisville physicians, they are rooming at the same place where Dr. Roberts is stopping, a son-in-law of Dr. Yandell, of Louisville. I went down with them to their rooms to see the Dr. as he was such a particular friend of Mr. Jas. Curd of Louisville, who had made me promise to hunt him up, but regret to say he was not in his room and as I learned he contemplates leaving for Paris to-morrow, I shall probably not meet him here before he leaves, but may come across him in Paris or in my travels on the continent. He has been here some two or three weeks. I have to day visited the House of Parliament, Charing Cross, Westminster Abbey and the old Bailey, of which I may speak in my letters hereafter. I am still covered up in winter clothing and my overcoat I find a very comfortable appendage. The weather is just such as we most generally have at home during "chill November's surly blasts." I find some pleasure in looking at the pictures of my precious babes, I would not exchange them for all Europe. Good bye.

AMERICAN EXCHANGE, LONDON,
June 5th, 1886.

On yesterday I spent about 3 hours in Guy's hospital, saw one Lichot operated on and a thigh amputated. I also heard a lecture on Hygiene and looked through all the wards. Since which I have visited St. Bartholomew hospital was shown through all the wards there by Dr. Gee the physician in charge, saw nothing of material interest conducing to better information. I am not at all favorably impressed by my observations and their English style of teaching. There is too much dignity, reticence and grandeur of look about it. In other words, they look wise and leave you to conjecture and presume that they know it all, without much explanation of their theory and mode of practical application. This hospital was built in 1102, is the oldest, wealthiest and most extensive in London. My former correspondence stated that after leaving the steam ship Eutruia at Queenstown, I had traveled up through Ireland, had visited the beautiful lakes of Killarney, had been to Dublin, where I visited Trinity college whose library contained some 250,000 or more volumes—which however is not as extensive as the library in the British Museum which I visited this morning and is said to contain over 900,000 volumes.

I shall visit Guy's hospital to-morrow and learn something of its history and modus operandi. I am endeavoring to school myself for taking in all things worthy of note presented to my view.

As stated in my letter of the 3d inst., I had visited the house of Parliament, Charing Cross, Westminster Abbey and the old Bailey, and as there are yet a thousand and one more places to go to, in this boundless old city, I long to have Dr. Clabe Watkins of Little Rock, my old college chum along with me, that we might see all the sights together, and next week go and "see Paris and die." No, no, this last expression will not exactly do, I would a little rather postpone that long journey, and dark leap into the unknown future, at least, until I get back to Little Rock. And would prefer even then, to defer it indefinitely, or at any rate, until I had a complete chart and way bill to guide me safely over Jordan's stormy sea.

I am writing this from the American exchange, where I find America well represented, all or nearly all however, strangers to me.

In my next will give you something else to con over.

A. H. SCOTT.

LONDON ENGLAND, PEKINS HOTEL,
69 EUSTON ROAD,
June 6, 1886.

I have this moment returned from the Tabernacle where I heard an excellent sermon delivered by the celebrated Mr. Spurgeon. His church is not a fine one, although it is said large enough to hold and seat 5000 people. It has two galleries and arranged something upon the plan of our theaters. Night before last I went to the Alhambra theatre, the scenery was most grand and sublime, its perfection in the art of painting cannot be excelled and is scarcely approximated on our side. The manner in which the lights are thrown upon the stage surpasses anything I ever before witnessed. I am, or rather imagine myself to be, the busiest mortal on English soil and instead of, as I intended to do when I left home, that of taking everything leisurely and making it pleasant as well as profitable, I am running myself down with fatigue and labor, giving myself but little rest and ever on the move from morn until night.

Yesterday I spent two or three hours in the British Museum, I walked and looked at mummies, sarcophagi and a hundred and forty and four thousand huge and undecipherable things, chiseled out of solid stone, bronze, brass, iron, alabaster, etc., etc. They are Graco, Roman, Assyrian, Egyptian, Etruscan, and indeed of every clime, art and thing that the ancient or modern intellect of the human race ever fashioned, made or executed, either sacred or profane. Its library as I said before contains 900,000 volumes—almost as many as I conceive I shall be able during my short stay here to read through, and fully comprehend, being the product of every nationality and of every dialect and language and tongue spoken or written upon the globe. But as you and all my friends in Pope know, that my purse and facilities from boyhood to manhood, reared among them has been extraordinarily the reverse of unbounded knowledge and means, you will no doubt feel astonished to learn of my great proficiency, as I can now even on English soil in this great city very readily say, I speak the English, le parlee le Francois, Ich spreche Deutsch. Indeed I would not hesitate in engaging in the beautiful and euphonious jargon and soft accented language of the China man, or even that of a Kangaroo when I fall in with them. Wonderful indeed you will say. Now do come over and take a few lessons, and see at least the great proficiency I have so soon made and acquired. I told many of my friends before leaving home, that I should expect them to put on all their politeness when I returned and met them, for I knew it would be contagious with me and I would be struck with it whenever I reached Paris, and that I would come home as chuk full of it as a "French Dancing Master." Now, pardon me for this deviation from my subject and the main points of interest I have in view in addressing you. Now to resume my observations. In going this morning to hear Dr. Spurgeon, I passed within a square of St. Paul's church, and could see its lofty dome—have crossed over Black Friars bridge, and through Ludgate circus, I walked over and across London Bridge twice on last Saturday, and have seen and witnessed so much, I don't know what best to write about first. I think I shall go to Paris next Saturday, where I hope I shall find letters awaiting me from home at least, if I find none I shall cablegram home for news. I confess I do feel a little homesick occasionally and feel desirous for the completion of my tour and the time for my return.

I imagine my enual and despondent feelings might be ameliorated if you would send over one or two of our first class American ladies, with I might dare to chaperone, and in whose company with their well known courtesy and grace, I might be permitted the pleasure of a visit to Buckingham Palace, and thereby obtain admission to an audience with the Queen. Without such companions, I shall despair of its realization, as I otherwise could not possibly gain admission into her presence, lacking the prerequisite appearance and polish of a high and lofty dignitary of some foreign court or the pompous swell of a turbaned Turk or Russian Autocrat.

I have been somewhat troubled with dyspepsia and attribute it all to the diet and abominable mode of preparing and cooking it. Their coffee and tea is made so strong that it would "float an iron wedge" and their meats and side preparations are anything but wholesome or desirable to me, and their use disarranges my entire system. I shall have to in a great measure desist in their use. I went this morning to 4 or 5 different restaurants to see if I could get some oat meal for my breakfast, but failed to find it. With us at home we relish this dish in the winter time, and as the temperature here approximates winter, supposed I would find it readily. At two of the places where I called for it, I was told that they were not Scotch, and I would not find it in London. I have not seen molasses, syrups, preserves, hot cakes, waffles or warm bread on their tables since I landed on British, Welsh or Irish soil.

Well you will say that with an empty stomach and in want of proper nourishment to satisfy the cravings of appetite, I had better cease writing any more for the present and take a little rest. So here I follow the advice I imagine you would give and close for the present.

A. H. SCOTT.

Don't Experiment.

You cannot afford to waste time in experimenting when your lungs are in danger. Consumption always seems at first, only a cold. Do not permit any dealer to impose upon you with some cheap imitation of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, but be sure you get the genuine. Because he can more profit he may tell you he has something just as good, or just the same. Don't be deceived, but insist upon getting Dr. King's New Discovery, which is guaranteed to give relief in all Throat, Lung and Chest affections. Trial bottles free at J. W. Wells' Drug Store.

How It Would Stand.

"If the house of representatives in our next legislature should be chosen from the several occupations of the people of the state, and each occupation represented according to its numerical strength on a basis of 2500 voters to one representative, that body would contain about eighty agriculturists and farm laborers; three from those engaged in manufacturing, mining and mechanical pursuits; two and a half from merchants, dealers and their clerks; one from those engaged in transportation; one from doctors and lawyers; one from teachers and ministers; one from hotel keepers and domestic servants; one half of one from official state service, and three from common laborers and others not mentioned, making about ninety-three members in all.

The agricultural representation would be six times greater than all the others combined. If the representation of common laborers were added, a great number of whom are in the employ of agriculturists, they would be about eight times as large as all the others combined."

We copy the above from the Wheel Enterprise, the State Wheel organ. And now we want to ask the Wheelers, or any of them, these simple questions: If the farmers are so largely in the majority, what have they to fear? Why should six or eight men secretly combine against one? The farmers are as largely in the majority in the Democratic party as out of it. Why then do they not use that party, their old party, to accomplish their ends? What need is there for a new political party? We pause for a reply.

The Demand Rapidly Increasing.

E. J. Madden, Damascus, Miss., writes: You will please send me another case of Hughes' Tonic, for Forrest, Miss. It is astonishing to note the rapidly increasing demand for Hughes' Tonic; to sell one bottle of it insures a much larger sale. We pronounce it by far, the best medicine we handle, and cheerfully recommend it to all those troubled with chills and fever.

Saved His Life.

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., says he was, for many years, badly afflicted with Pithisic, also Diabetes; pains were almost thrown him into convulsions. He tried Electric Bitters and got relief from first bottle and after taking six bottles, was entirely cured, and had gained in flesh eighteen pounds. Says he positively believes he would have died, had it not been for the relief afforded by Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by J. W. Wells.

MARKETABLE BRAINS.

Republished by request.

A Bright Essay by a Young Lady Student at the Little Rock University.

Gazette June 9.

At the closing exercises of the Little Rock University, a few days since, the literary societies of the University had interesting exercises, at which the following essay was read by Miss Berna Smade:

MARKETABLE BRAINS.

Commerce is an interchanging of commodities. The country that has the greatest interchanging of these commodities is the one that occupies the highest round on the ladder, which is composed of the civilized nations of the world. As a rule those nations which have the greatest interchanging of commodities produce the best articles of merchandise, but this, like all other rules, has a few exceptions. Almost all countries have articles of merchandise peculiar to themselves, but there is one very useful and important article which is found in all cultured nations, and that is brains. Indeed, it has been said by one of our great men that brains are the most useful of all commodities. During all the ages of the past and all along the line up to the present time, brains have been to a greater or less extent on the market. Centuries and centuries ago when this vast world was yet in its infancy, the brains of such men as Plato and Aristotle found a ready market, thus benefitting not only themselves personally, but also their fellows and their country, and leaving a name on the scroll of fame which the winters and summers of many, many years have failed to fade. But probably in no period of the world's history has there been so great a number of marketable brains at one time as there is to-day. Look for example at the number of great statesmen and doctors and authors who dwell in our prosperous nation to-day. How is it that as such they do this? They produce no articles of merchandise. No, but they have cultivated the gardens of their minds and place the productions of these cultivated gardens on the market, where they find a ready sale. We do not have to go very far to find an illustration of this. Turn your attention for a short time to the present governor of our state. When he announced himself as a candidate for the highest position in the state of Arkansas, a majority of the voters thought him better fitted for that position than any one else and the consequence was they gave him the office, and the brains which he put on the market not only bring him now the more substantial things of life but also a high degree of honor. Look again at Prof. Lewis, the worthy president of our University. He, after cultivating and refining his brains, placed them on the market at a premium. The Freedman's Aid society, deciding that he was exactly qualified for the position at the head of our progressive school, hired him and paid him that premium, thus placing him in a position of wide influence and great honor. Of course there is a great variety shown in the kinds of marketable brains. There is the mathematical brain, the literary brain, the brain which is adapted to business and a great many other kinds. In fact there is almost as much diversity shown in the brains which are on the market, as there is in nearly any other article of merchandise, and even more than is shown in some. A good article is always in demand. It pays a person therefore much better when producing an article which is to be brought before the public, to prepare it in a thorough manner. There are a great many articles of merchandise put on the market as being first class, which, when tested, prove to be only a sham. To be sure the sale of these inferior goods at a first class price, brings the seller seeming profit, but in the long run it is a great loss. This is also true of brains as an article of merchandise. Who has not seen important positions held by those who were incompetent and untrustworthy? This seems to be true especially in politics, but follow the career of a person holding such a position, and see whether in the end he gains or loses. There are few but that would have marketable brains if cultivated in the right way, but there are a great many whose brains do not do them much good, because if cultivated at all it is in the wrong way. Who could expect a man to be a success as a doctor when he had a positive dislike to the profession; or who could expect a man to make a success as a minister when he wanted to be a merchant? Yet we often see cases of this kind. Then again there are those who really possess extraordinary brains who never make any mark in the world. What is the reason? It is simply because they lack "polish." Take a diamond and put it on the market in its natural and rough condition, and what is it worth as an article of merchandise? Nothing at all. Yet the real worth is there just the same, but it is not until it is refined and polished that it brings the rare price that makes the diamond so valuable as an article of commerce. If the cultivation and refinement of our brains is so necessary to make them useful and marketable (and we all know it is) we should consider it not only an important duty to perform but also a great pleasure which we should enjoy in preparing them for the great battle of life in which all have to take a part. This is done by reading refining literature, by choosing for companions those whose influence will elevate rather than debase, and above all by thinking none but pure thoughts. The many and different excellent schools with which our country abounds are a great help to those who wish to thus cultivate their brains, but they are not an absolute necessity, for some of the greatest men who ever lived did not enjoy their advantages. Our lives are what we make them; let us, therefore begin early to make them what we would have them; for, generally speaking, "as the twig is bent, so is the tree inclined." The future is before us like a dense mist which we can only penetrate step by step, but when we at last reach the other side and look back over our lives, and see the victories lost and those won, and when we see the steps taken aside from the path we should have trodden, be they many, or be they few, and when we see the mistakes we have made, let us say with the poet of old:

"If vain the toll
Blame the culture, not the soil!"

In every land and clime, the merits of St. Jacobs Oil as the only conqueror of pain, are being acknowledged by the press and people.

"Rainbow" parties are now the craze all over the state.

CURE FOR PILES.

Piles are frequently preceded by a sense of weight in the back, loins and lower part of the abdomen, causing the patient to suppose he had some affection of the kidneys or neighboring organs. At times, symptoms of indigestion are present, as flatulency, uneasiness of the stomach, etc. A moisture, like perspiration, producing a very disagreeable itching, after getting warm, is a very common attendant. Blind, Bleeding and Itching Piles yield at once to the application of Dr. Bosanko's Pile Remedy, which acts directly upon the part affected, absorbing the Tumors, allaying the intense itching, and effecting a permanent cure. Price, 50 cents. Address, The Dr. Bosanko Medicine Co., Piqua, Ohio. Sold by J. M. Harkey & Bro., and W. S. Hinton, Atkins. May 1-ly.

GENTS—Every one who is acquainted with me is aware of the fact that I am of an exceedingly bilious temperament, and as a consequence have suffered a great deal with low fever. About two months ago I had a protracted attack of these low, hardly perceptible yet dreadful bad-feeling fevers. They would come on about 4 o'clock in the afternoon and last until bedtime. I took quinine for fourteen days, but to no purpose. I then took sixty drops of "Satanta," about the time the fever came on, and since then I have been entirely clear of fever. Now, when I feel bad, I take from thirty to sixty drops of "Satanta," and it braces me up. It is simply immense and I take pleasure in recommending it.
